Phrases in use—in use with the vulgar and the polished, with the illiterate and the learned, with males and females, with the man of hoary head and the yet lisping child, and in ordinary, familiar, accepted, and most approved use—amount to hundreds. They are heard in the market and on the road, in the field and in the house, in the discussion of matters of sober business and in angry altercations or fightings. They form an important constituent of many causes and cases which ultimately appear in the halls of the Collector and in the courts of the Judge. This reason for inserting them—and this has been our reason for inserting others of the gross and coarse phrases and terms of the nation's vocabulary—has, however, been deemed insufficient, and all but the above few are omitted. This observation and this notice apply also to the compounds occurring below. [grain-sack. Opp. to उराडी.

This verb, as is observed of the verb To take, is used with endless multiplicity of relations. Its applications are numerous beyond all serviceable illustration. Its use in construction with nouns (as उत्थापन घेणे, घर-चालीवर-जागा-शेवट-तोडी-वर-त्तरेवर-धाव-परीक्षा-पाठ-रान-घेणे) or with participles (as अटोपता-कांकरता-चालता-काढता-घेणे) like that of its fellows, देणे, टाकणे, मारणे, घालणे, पाडणे, and others, will appear and be intelligible on every page of the dictionary. As it corresponds with the English verb To take, almost throughout its applications, it will suffice to give the following additional variations of this sense:

—To take (breath, leave, farewell, revenge, a course or way); to use or employ; to swallow; to adopt; to endure or bear; to comprise or comprehend; to seize—as a disease; to take (oath).

च The sixth consonant. It has, in Sanskrit words, the sound of Ch in Church, in Prakrit words, the sound, sometimes of Ch or Tsh, sometimes of Ts, which, although difficult to be represented on paper, is easily apprehended by the ear. It was designed to represent this softened sound by च; but, as on this plan, innumerable typographical errors were to be expected, and thus endless and vexatious misdirections to the learner, the following rule is substituted for the discrimination and use of it.

Of words not Sanskrit (Sanskrit words are all marked with S), not Persian, Arabic, or Hindu-stani (which words are marked respectively with P, A, and H), and not of that intermediate class which, adopted from the Sanskrit, and now of too remote adoption and too general currency to be marked S, are in pronunciation regarded, sometimes with reference to their origin, and sometimes as words of mere Marathi (to such, for the easy discrimination of them, is attached, within parentheses, the letter S),—of all words not included under these three classes (i. e. of all words not marked S, or P, A, H, or (S)) let every च, चा, चु, चू, चै, चो, चौ, whether initial, medial, or final, be sounded as ts in Nuts, and every चि, ची, चे as tsh, or ch, in Chip, Cheek, Chaste.

In exception to this rule Note—

1st, that चे & चें are, in the Konkan, pronounced as tse and tseñ.

2nd, that of some Hindustani words, च, चा, चु, चू, &c. are pronounced as ts. Such cases will, for the most part, be noted.

च ind An affix of emphasis or of enhancing power; expressing positiveness, peremptoriness, particularity, exactness, certainty &c. It corresponds with our Very, self, indeed, surely &c. Ex.

He is a thief. तुम्हीच या Come yourself; तुम्ही याच
Come at all risks, you must come. मी जेवतांच उठलो
I rose instantly after my meal. मी येईनच or मी येईनच येईन I will come, assuredly, positively. It seems further to have a qualifying significancy.

चा The declinable postposition marking the sixth or genitive case. It notes I. Property or possession; as हे त्याचे घर. II. Appropriation, adaptation, particular application; as हा बसावयाचा घोंडा; ती खानाची घोंड. III. Time, or the coexistence of a time with an event,—at, on &c.; as मी दुपारचा येईन; तो सांजचा गेला; तो केव्हाचा ये-जन बसला. IV. Connection, relation, appertainment, throughout the variations of sense of these words; as गांवचा पाटोल; मुलाचा बाप; झाडाचें पान; नित्यदानाचा ब्राह्मण; घरचा पैका. V. Completeness, allness or wholeness, utterness; thus corresponding with ६ Hindustānī; as पैकाचा पैका; घरचें घर; महिन्याचा महिना. All the money or the money utterly; the whole house; the whole month from beginning to end. N.B. Here the governing noun is always reduplicated. Pr. बापाचा बाप गेला बोंबलतां हात गेला. VI. Change from and unto. Ex. दरिद्राचा श्रीमंत होता श्रीमंताचा दरिद्री होता.

चा sometimes inflects, sometimes does not inflect, the noun assuming it. The difference of signification in these cases it will be advantageous to note. Inflecting the noun, it expresses any accidental connection or relation; as घरचा धनी Owner of the house; घरचा पैका Money resulting from (the sale, rent &c. of) the house: not inflecting the noun, it expresses a closer and more intimate connection—an inherence, appertainment, dependence &c.; as घरचा धनी Master of the family; घरचा पैका Family-stock or capital; घरचीं माणसें Inmates of the house, the household; अंगचें बळ Bodily strength. Inflecting the noun, चा is in government, and is the postposition marking the genitive case: not inflecting the noun, चा simply serves to form the assuming noun into an adjective.

ज The eighth consonant. It corresponds, in words from the Sanskrit, with J in Jug, Jump; but in Prākrit words and in words received from the Hindústānī, it has the sound, sometimes of J, and commonly of Dz, as in Adz. It was designed to represent this softened sound by 'ज'; but as on this plan innumerable typographical errors were to be expected, and thus endless and vexatious misdirections to the learner, the following rule is substituted for the discrimination and use of it:—

 Of all words not Sanskrit (Sanskrit words are marked with S), and not of that intermediate class which, adopted from the Sanskrit and now of too remote adoption and too general currency to be marked S, are in pronunciation regarded sometimes with reference to their origin and sometimes as words of mere Marāthī (to such, for the easy discrimination of them, is attached, within parentheses, the letter S),—let every ज, जा, जु, जू, जै, जो, जौ, whether initial, medial, or final, be sounded as Dz in Adz, and every जि, जी, जे, as J in Jilt, Jeer, Jane.
 Thus even the Arabic and Persian words, written with ذ, ز, ض, & ظ (as ذکر, ذمه, زراعت, ضلع, زیر, زین), of which therefore the sound should be soft, as of z, will be, in Marāthī, written with जि, जी, & जे, and sounded always with the sound of J.
 In exception to this rule Note:—
 That जे masc. plural of जो, & जें neut. singular, and जे the conjunction are, in the Konkan, usually as pronounced dze and dzen:—
 And that of some Persian and Arabic words the ज, जा, &c. are pronounced as J, as in جادو, جوانی.
 ज a S Born, produced, sprung from. Attached to Sanskrit words it forms endless valuable compounds: e. g. अंडज, खेदज, जरायुज, उदरज, अपयज, जलज, पापज, तपज, कफज, पित्तज, वातज, रक्तज, विदोषज, क्षतज.

ज्वर m (S) Fever. Upon the following words both the variety of general apprehension and the disagreement amongst physicians are so great that it has been judged advisable to insert them here, and to explain them together. Of ऐकाहिकज्वर the acceptations are 1st, Fever returning daily, quotidian; 2nd, Fever having alternate increase and remission, remittent: of द्वयाहिक ज्वर—1st, Fever having two days of intermission; 2nd, Fever having two daily exacerbations; 3d, Fever returning the second day after, i. e. having one day of intermission: of त्रयाहिकज्वर—1st, Fever returning on the third day, exclusively of the fever-day, i. e. that leaves two days free; 2nd, Fever recurring every third day, tertian; 3rd, Fever continuing three days: of चातुर्थिकज्वर—Fever returning every fourth day, quartan. Much inquiry, and amongst the learned, has discovered the above: consultation of the माधवनिदान (a work of authority) has determined what follows. ऐकाहिकज्वर is remittent fever: द्वयाहिक is fever recurring the second day, the day after the intermitting day—tertian fever:

त्रयाहिक is fever recurring after two days of intermission—quartan fever: चाहिक is, with full agreement of Shástra, the learned, and the people, quartan. Further, distinction is made (both by माधवनिदान and by usus popular and learned) betwixt सततज्वर & संततज्वर. The former is Remit-tent fever; the latter, Unremitting or Continued fever. अन्येद्युः m (A high word but in use.) Quoti-

ड The thirteenth consonant. Its sound corresponds exactly with that of no letter of the English alphabet; and it must therefore be sought by the ear. Yet one brief notice may be given. Initially (i. e. whether at the beginning of a word or of a syllable) ड is a hard or palatal D (d); finally (i. e. whether at the end of a word or of a syllable) ड is not a hard D, but a hard and rolling R—a sound formed by the retraction and rolling off of the tongue immediately after its appulse at the palate. This hard and rolling R is sufficiently definite and distinguishable; and it will nearly as ill bear the substitution for it in utterance of the hard and palatal D as of the soft and dental D. Dhed, kad, rad, ghad &c. are therefore erroneous representations of डेड, कड, रड, घड, and Dher, kar, rar, ghar, are far more eligible. The two sounds are represented in this work respectively by d and r; but, as sounds are for the ear, hie thee to the speaker.

ण The fifteenth consonant. It is sounded more nasally than the English N. It is represented here, when the Roman character is used, by n. Except as in the particle णें & pl णीं, for which see the preferable form नें & नीं, it never occurs initially.

त The sixteenth consonant, and the first of the fourth or dental class; sounded as T in tube, tulip, tune, or more softly still. त, as well as ट, and their aspirates थ & ठ, must be acquired by the ear. The English T represents with exactitude neither त nor ट, being medial betwixt the softness of the dental and the sharpness or hardness of the palatal. Further, T has with English speakers many shades of softness and hardness, and the English ear is heavy or full of kind allowance. Not so interchanged are त & ट by the Native tongue; and not so indiscriminating or accommodating is the Native ear. To distinguish these letters accurately is all-important. The above notice, substituting for त, ट, for थ, ठ, for the aspirates थ & ठ, the aspirates थ & ठ, and for T, D, applies, word for word, to the letter ट. It may be profitable to observe here that the universal apprehension, by Native students of English, of the sound of the English letters T & D as exactly that respectively of their own ट & ड, and the practice, all but universal, by the teachers of English (whether of this country or of England) of either teaching or admitting this representation of T & D unto the exclusion, absolutely and altogether, of त & ट—are unwarranted by the case, and fraught with detriment to Native scholarship. As T & D are incorrectly and most offensively conveyed in vocal expression by ट & ड, and as Th (as in think, thing), and as standing for Dh (as in thus, that), would be quite insufferably rendered by ट & ड, whilst by त & ट they are re-uttered, although more softly and sweetly, yet, to no English ear, objectionably (e. g. compare, as competing equivalents for tune, tulip, dupe, due तून, तूलिप, तूप, तू & तून, तूलिप, तूप, तू, and, as equivalents for think, thus, compare ठिक, ठस & थिक, थस), it is suggested that, as representatives of T & D, ट & ड be disallowed and discarded, and त & ट (with the approximating थ for Th) be employed and taught—and this universally.

The distinction drawn under मोडणें between that verb and तोडणें holds, in so far as मोडणें is intransitive, between that verb and this. Consult it therefore. Whilst of मोडणें the sense is TO BREAK, with the ever-inherent implication of Destruction of form or state, the sense of तुटणें is TO BREAK, with the implication of Parting or separating. It may be a profitable exercise to the learner to trace out this distinction through all the senses given under both the verbs.

ल An affix to Sanskrit adjectives and nouns to form the noun abstract. All such formations are neuter. As they demand no interpretation, and no further notice than the following exhibition of the distinction betwixt these formations and those with the affix ता, they, with the exception of certain few pertaining to Heads ii and iii., do not appear in this dictionary.

These two affixes, ल & ता, are understood by Sanskrit grammarians and scholars to be, excepting only in gender, equivalent. But they are not thus equivalent:—they demand other exceptions. In being adjuncts for the formation of the abstract noun, and in being in some few instances justly interchangeable and in some other few laxly confounded, they agree; but they differ—

First, In that, whilst ता forms the abstract from adjectives, ल, although, likewise, forming it from adjectives, forms it mainly from nouns—concrete nouns:

Secondly, In that, whilst ता forms abstracts of quality, ल forms abstracts of office or function, state or condition, and of the stages or periods of life; ता thus answering to ness, ल to ship and hood: Thirdly, In that, whilst ता & ल both form abstract terms expressing attributes or properties, there pertains preferableness or greater eligibility to ल:

Fourthly, In that ता, even in the cases common to ता & ल, is the popular or familiar affix, and ल the scholastic or ornate affix.

Of the first and second particulars of difference exemplification may be adduced in योग्यता, अर्हता, आर्द्रता, उष्णता—abstracts from adjectives, answering to fitness, wetness &c.; and in राजल, प्रधानल, पंडितल, शिष्यल, दासल, भृत्यल, पिढल, माढल, पुत्रल, भ्रातृल, भर्तृल, पुरुषल, स्त्रील, बालल, तरुणल, वृद्धल—abstracts from concretes, answering to kingship, childhood &c. Of the third particular illustration is found in लघुता as excelled by लघुल, सहजा by सहल, गुरुता by गुरुल, द्रवता by द्रवल, अज्ञानता by अज्ञानल, and in दाढता &c. immeasurably by दाढल, वक्रल, कर्तृल, नियंढल, भोक्तृल &c. &c. Of the last particular the verification is in दुष्टता, मिष्टता, आसुता, तीक्ष्णता, कटुता, क्षारता &c. endlessly, as compared with दुष्टल, मिष्टल &c.
